

ABSTRACT

A fuel pressure regulator for use in internal combustion engines. The fuel pressure regulator includes a valve seat and a 5 valve body disposed downstream of the valve seat and is designed to move the valve body away from the valve seat through the pressure of fuel applied directly to the valve body. This eliminates the need for a diaphragm and results in a simplified structure of the fuel pressure regulator.